From the hiking information sign, head towards the red fire hydrant and take the Dent de Rez and Col d'Eyrole, clearly visible on the horizon, as your sights as you walk along the houses of the housing estate, following the wooden posts that mark the path.

Opposite the cemetery, turn right onto the road and immediately take the path along a wire fence.

1. Continue until you reach the Bréchon junction. Cross a small tarmac road towards Gerles. Turn right onto the road in a residential area at La Rouvière, then right onto the small road to Les Reynouards, passing lavender fields and vineyards. Turn right and follow the signs to the nature reserve.
2. Turn left onto the small tarmac road, which becomes a footpath at the first bend, and go over the barrier restricting access to authorised vehicles only. You are now entering the protected area.
3. At the Col d'Eyrole, turn right towards the foot of the cliff. The closer you get to the cliff, the steeper it becomes.
4. Cross a short escarpment in the rocks that gives access to the summit plateau.
5. Follow the edge of the plateau to the right to reach its highest point, where you will find the orientation table. Continue across the moorland to the opposite end of the plateau. At the Dent de Rez signpost, turn right towards Gogne and follow the path down a few stony switchbacks to the Col de l'Aulagner.
6. Continue straight ahead to reach the nearby hamlet of Gogne.
7. Just after the first house, turn right onto the path that initially follows the ridge as far as the Serrélia junction.
8. At this point, turn right and head downhill into a deep valley.
9. Cross the stream over a stone bridge and climb back up the opposite slope along a small, more or less tarmac road. At the top of the climb, you come to the crossroads with the Chemin de Brechon. Turn left and walk along the housing estate in the opposite direction back to the school.

! Advices

Around sectors 4 and 9, this route has some very steep sections, which can be impressive for people who are sensitive to vertigo.
